HOW TO STOP AN AMBULANCE

KQT fleet in Philadelphia, PA

When it comes to stopping safely, there's no such thing as "good enough." Especially for an ambulance.

That's why Duralast Severe Duty Brakes are the go-to for Philadelphia-based medical transport company, Keystone Quality Transport (KQT).

Jim Campbell, the fleet supervisor at KQT, manages maintenance for more than 300 ambulances and paratransit vehicles. Because these vehicles run "around the clock," quality brake performance is critical.

"I need something that's gonna hold up more than your typical set of brake pads," he said.

Through rigorous in-house testing against OEM and competitor brands, Campbell found Duralast Severe Duty Brakes not only outperformed his expectations but also saved Keystone more than $500 per vehicle.

"It's smarter for me to use AutoZone in the long run"

Campbell said. Philadelphia is the 6th largest city in the country and KQT vehicles help more than 250,000 people each year, keeping up with the busy city's demands.

"I need to make sure these ambulances stay on the road," said Campbell. "I've got to make sure there's no faults."

Campbell stays ahead of brake issues with full inspections every 3,000 miles, checking pads, rotors, calipers, hoses, and hardware. "We pull all the tires off, inspect the brakes, pull the guide pins off...and then put it all back together."

"It's just easier to be thorough," said Nick Congiardo, AutoZone Territory Sales Manager. "If this was 10, 15 years ago, you could talk about turning rotors and things like that, but it's just not something I see our customers doing anymore."

Duralast Severe Duty Brakes

- Up to 35% thicker shims
- Advanced friction formulation
- Specialized slots & chamfers

"With special applications, it's even more crucial to be checking everything," said Marvin Toelupe, AutoZone Category Manager over brakes. "There's a lot more strain to the braking system."

Accounting for that strain is why Campbell places such high importance on choosing the right brakes, Duralast Severe Duty, and inspecting every detail. Because when lives are on the line, you can't cut corners on safety.

PRO TIP Perform the Complete Brake Job

DON'T FORGET to check the calipers during a brake job.

Over 20% of brake and rotor replacements require a caliper purchase within 24 hours.
